PARCHED NEW ENGLAND.

Dry Springs and Dry Fields—Great Damage to Corn, Potatoes, and Late Fruit.

BOSTON, Aug. 13.—Scarcely within the recollection of man has there been so serious and widespread drought occurred in the New England States than that which now prevails. Reports from every State tell pretty nearly the same story: No rain other than local showers, low water in rivers and ponds, dry wells and springs, and universal injury to corn, potatoes, and late season fruit.

From the St. Croix on the east to the Champlain on the west, and from the Canada border to Long Island Sound, there has been no considerable rain reported during the past four weeks, except in two or three localities. The hay crop, harvested before the dry weather set in, is larger than usual, while wheat and oats do not suffer seriously.

In Maine, as in other States, the acreage of potatoes is large. The report comes from Lewiston, however, that the yield will not reach half the average crop. There is still some hope for corn if the rain is not too long delayed.

The most serious interest in Maine is the lumber industry, for the dry weather has dried up many of the rivers that the mills are dependent upon. The fields look like September. The pastures are dead. Potatoes and fruit are almost ruined. The corn is in a sorry state.

By the report of the State agricultural statistician, in which apples are put at 33, and in Vermont nearly the same story comes. The yield of apples is only one-third of the average, and crops of other fruits are also ruined. The corn is in a sorry state.

The drought which is now prevailing will materially reduce the yield of the crops. The corn, which is usually worth half a million dollars, will not reach half that this season. A further drought would ruin the crops entirely.

Massachusetts seems to have suffered most. The crops are ruined. The corn is in a sorry state. The potatoes are ruined. The fruit is ruined. The hay is ruined. The grain is ruined. The crops are ruined.

ANOTHER WARNING CRASH.

THE SIRIUS AND SYLVAN DELLS IN COLLISION IN THE UPPER BAY.

Terrified Passengers Making a Rush for the Life Preservers—Two Versions of the Collision—Only Slight Damage Caused.

Two excursion boats, carrying about 700 passengers each, were in collision yesterday afternoon in the Upper Bay. The fact that one of the boats immediately steamed to the Long Island shore gave rise to the rumor that she had suffered considerable damage and had been in danger of sinking. The collision occurred at about 2 P. M., off the Robin's Reef Light. The boats were the Sirius of the Iron Steamboat Company, and the Sylvan Dell, which runs from North River piers to Bay Ridge, connecting with the New York and Sea Beach Railroad to Coney Island.

The Sirius left Pier 1 before the Sylvan Dell was to leave. The captain is Hosen Longstreet, an experienced pilot. It is claimed that she was steering her regular course in deep water, making for the lights that is kept moored off Coney Island by the Iron Steamboat Company. Superintendent Ketchum says that, owing to the superior speed of the Sylvan Dell, her propeller struck the bow of the Sirius, and that the latter was forced to stop.

The Sirius, however, had a good start, and the Sylvan Dell could not overtake her. The collision occurred at about 2 P. M., off the Robin's Reef Light.
